

The black caf

A man tells his own story. He was passionate about animals, he always had many. He married early and was lucky enough to find a woman who also loved animals. They had many, from fish to a monkey, but the one he liked best was a very large black cat, which he called Pluto.

With the passage of time, man began to get impatient, irritable, and lost his affection for animals, except for Pluto. The man drank a lot, and one day when he got home drunk, he pierced his cat's eyes. Not satisfied, he took a rope and hung his cat from a tree. The next day, he had woken up with a startled scream of "fire!". It was his house on fire. The next day, your house on fire.

The next day, he went to his house and saw what was left. Only one wall was still standing, with the marks of a hanged cat. He then went looking for a cat that looked like Pluto, and found one, with only one difference, it had a white spot on its chest. The man hated the cat, while his wife had it as her favorite animal.

The cat never appeared again.
The police searched the whole house. Upon leaving, the man surrenders and confesses to the brutal crime.
