A Lion slept quiet, when he was awakened by a mouse, that ran across his face.

With a fast boat he took it, and was ready to kill him, the mouse pleaded:

"Now, you see, if you spare me, I'm sure that one day could repay his kindness."

Although laugh, to find such a possibility, yet he decided to release him.

It happened that, shortly after, the lion fell into a trap set by hunters. Thus, pinned to the ground, tied by strong ropes, and completely helpless hostage fateful destiny that awaited him certainly, could not even move.

The Mouse, recognizing his roar, came and gnawed the ropes to set him free. Then he said:

"You laughed at the very idea that I would be able one day to return your favor. But now you know, that even a little mouse is able to do a favor for a powerful lion."

Moral of the story:

No act of kindness is vanity. We can not judge the importance of a favor, the benefactor's appearance.
